The New York City Anti-Violence Project (AVP) is dedicated to eliminating hate violence, sexual assault, stalking, and domestic violence in lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer (LGBTQ) and HIV-affected communities through counseling, advocacy, organizing, and public education. Established in 1980, AVP provides free, confidential support to LGBTQ and HIV-affected people who have experienced violence, and is the largest organization of its kind in the United States. We provide drop-in counseling; support groups and clinics; advocacy with police, courts, and social service agencies; and a 24-hour bilingual (English/Spanish) hotline. We track incidents of violence, using this information to educate our communities and the public about violence affecting LGBTQ and HIV-affected people. We train law enforcement, health care professionals, and social service agencies to improve responses and expand resources to LGBTQ and HIV-affected survivors of violence. AVP believes that by building an active network of committed partners and allies, we can create a future where LGBTQ and HIV-affected people live free of violence.
